SERVICE

The commencement time of 1917 is no ordinary commencement. Never before has a graduating class stepped from quiet school life into such a world of conflict and opportunity. Formerly the graduate sought his place in a world of peace, but the class of 1917 must accept a place in a world at war. The high school graduate has only to choose his field of service. The farm, the shop, the ranks, or the Red Cross are all in need of recruits.

While the boys and girls of European Countries have been learning life in the school of experience, the graduates of 1917 have been studying from books. The fine principles which have enlisted our country in the present war are those which make possible the annual commencement time for American boys and girls. Service to country should be the graduate's first "bit" of the world's work. To such service the class of 1917 dedicate themselves.

WHAT IF THERE WERE NO SENIORS

What if there were no seniors! What if those in authority would decree that the senior was a luxury in this age of economy and terminate the high school course with the junior year!

Can the student body contemplate the loss to S. H. S. in scholarship alone if such a measure should be enforced? Without the senior there would be no honor roll, no multitude of I's, no new stalls for Monday, no literary browsing in the "World's Almanac."

If there were no seniors, the corridors would not be crowded with the continuous traffic from the study hall to the office, from the study hall to the lockers, from the study hall to the shop, from the study hall to anywhere in quest of entertainment.

The social life too would decline with the removal of the congenial senior. Hanging on locker doors would disappear altogether. No further reinforcements to rails and balustrades serving as trysting places would be necessary. On the underclass men themselves would fall the entertainment of their own girl members. And mid-week social functions would go out of fashion.

Without the seniors discipline would no longer be on the required course of study. Everyday would be a holiday for the principal. School bonds to pay for notices mailed to parents would be unnecessary. Absence would be as rare as New Year's Day, and the word tardy would be marked obs. in the school dictionary.

The most acute result from the elimination of the seniors would be the depletion of the ranks of the world's great men. To deprive the school of the seniors would be to deprive the next decade of the brainy group from which it plans to draw its great citizens.

Let the high school conserve on exams, conferences, tests, and supplies, but never on the senior.

On The Border

ASA HUTTON '17

"Take a last look, Scotty," advised John McCutcheon at the crest of the hill where he stood with a Scotch Collie surveying the Bar-H Ranch that lay in the valley before him. "It may take some time to lick the Mexies. We don't want to forget how home looks."

John McCutcheon, the big son of James McCutcheon of Bar-H Ranch, three years before added to his social assets by joining Company J of the Kansas National Guards. In the summer of 1916, orders to the Mexican border had suddenly called John into service.

"You're determined to take Scotty?" his father asked.

"The only movable piece of the family that could accompany me," explained John, laughing. "I can't go entirely unattended."

When on the next day, the train loaded with boys in khaki left Rockhill, Scotty was the only passenger who was thoroughly pleased with the prospects of a trip south. His joyful tail, his friendly bark, his happy demeanor, all expressed, in dog fashion, Scotty's pleasure in his extraordinary privilege of doing service for Uncle Sam.

After the train pulled out, the mascot divided his time between the men and the car windows. The rural life that slipped by on the passing farms interested him. As the train traveled south into Texas, fewer living creatures were visible from the car windows and Scotty became more intimately acquainted with the boys of Company J.

On the border, the temperature was as high as the men's spirits. Scotty, too, was enthusiastic over the new life. The barren plains of Texas however, held little of permanent interest to the boys in khaki except the daily routine of camp life.

"Company, fall in!" "Right by squads!" "Left turn!" "Forward March!" "Column right," filled three hours of the monotony of each day. Scotty seemed to understand these orders perfectly. An onlooker might have mistaken the mascot for the first sergeant of the company.

Many of the Kansas companies pitched camp together, each company having a street of its own. Down these streets Scotty had a host of acquaintances that had their part in his degeneration as a military hero.

On the morning following reveille three weeks after the company's arrival on the border, John raised up in his bunk, emitted a huge grunt and looked about for Scotty, who gave some service as a valet.

"Scotty, my shoes!" he commanded.

The dog turned his head in John's direction and then slowly replaced it between his forepaws, stretched himself and resumed his nap.

"Move, you lazy cur!"

On the word "move" which John specially emphasized, he further impressed Scotty with its meaning by both of the shoes, which were within difficult reach. The command took effect. The dog moved but out of the tent door in a cowardly fashion.

The semi-tropical climate had already begun to absorb Scotty's pep. He became a disgrace to the spirit of Company J. A command had to be emphasized with cuffs, kicks, and such loose particles of Texas topography as happened to be at hand.

"Scotty," predicted John gloomily, one day observing his spiritless companion, "the boys are down on you."

Scotty made no visible sign of regret, but lay in the shade of the tent, his head between his forepaws, his eyes closed, too indolent to snap at disturbing flies.

"Chase that dog," urged the sensitive Blake from in front of the next tent.

"He's so fat that every time he lies down he rocks himself to sleep getting up."

"Consequently never awake," commented another.

"Court-martial him!"

"Dog meat!"

From all sides and angles Scotty's popularity as the company's mascot had become open contempt.

"Texas fever," explained John. "Let the dog become acclimated. He has pep, but it's dormant."

Three weeks later Scotty was still eating three meals a day and offending the men of Company J by ignoring commands and by taking sleeping privileges anywhere.

Company J on its arrival in Texas had expected to march directly to Mexico City. The delay on the border had been a disappointment. Camp life peevied them and Scotty's court-martial became a matter of entertainment.

"Get rid of the cur, McCutcheon" said Blake, the officer in authority. "The fellows don't like him. Send him home or let someone take a crack at him."

Rumors of the approach of Mexican bandits so closely followed Scotty's sentence that no immediate action was taken.

A re-enforced guard was put on at night. A sentinel had been killed at his post and the excitement of the first days was renewed. The following night the sergeant of the guard called for a volunteer to do duty at the dangerous post, and John offered his services.

The night was dark. About ten o'clock a slow rain settled upon the camp, adding to the unpleasantness of guard duty. Scotty lay on the ground apparently deaf to John's friendly and reproachful remarks. Suddenly the dog gave a low growl.

"What is it, Scotty?"

The guard peered into the darkness but could see nothing.

Again Scotty growled and rose angrily.

"Down Scotty," urged the guard, as he searched the darkness for the suspicion of alarm.

A dark object, scarcely discernible in the darkness was approaching stealthily.

"Halt!" he ordered.

The dark form continued to advance.

John repeated the order sharply.

The form was now within thirty feet of him.

Scotty did not wait for orders, but sprang at the enemy. Against the form that suddenly became erect and threatening Scotty sprang, enraged. A short fierce struggle, and the enemy was down. But Scotty, too, lay on the ground with the blood flowing from a deep knife wound.

Three shots fired in rapid succession roused the camp. The hurrying relief found the sentry guarding the captive bandit, and praising tenderly the unresponsive hero, stretched lifeless at his feet.

On the following day the entire camp took part in giving Scotty a military funeral.

I Smell Smoke

MARY MINER '17

"It's too hot for lab," growled Bob listlessly among his test tubes.

"Here, let me cool you off." Jerry placed his fingers over the water faucet and directed a fine spray into Bob's face.

"Cut it out," bawled Bob, reaching for his handkerchief. "Did I ask for a shower?"

All this irregularity took place behind Claypoole, the instructor, who sat at a distant table in an earnest interview with one of those unfortunates who could not understand.

Suddenly the fire gong disturbed the lazy atmosphere. The instructor rose in haste and gave the signal for dismissal. At once the dull class-room became an enthusiastic one in the great scramble to be first.

Bob alone was reluctant.

"What in the deuce do they want with a fire drill on such a hot day?" he inquired of himself. "Worst kind of judgment. If I could find a crack to hide in, I'd pass it up, all right."

The door of the supply closet stood suggestively open.

"Just the ticket," he continued under his breath. "I'll sure put one over on old 'Sandpond' this time."

With a furtive look at Claypoole, which aroused that instructor's suspicions, and a pitying glance at the obedient class, he entered the hiding place gayly and closed the door. A moment later he was regarding his departing classmates humorously through the key-hole.

The situation was the cleverest in Bob's memory, and his enjoyment was all but audible, when a key suddenly inserted in the lock cut off his view, and a subsequent click announced his imprisonment. Bob was bored by this turn of events, and he blamed Claypoole as a penurious old skinflint who could not leave the room without locking up the chemistry "junk."

"This is a pretty mess," he muttered. "Locked in a hole as black as midnight and stuffy as a cupboard. Well, I should worry!" he concluded indifferently.

Bob felt in the darkness for a seat. Finding none, he settled himself on the floor: not uncomfortable, he began to visualize the humorous outcome of his sudden disappearance.

"Gee! I sure would like to see the scene when Clay reports, won't old Hall rave? It's all worth the discomfort," he agreed and mopped his face cheerfully.

The sound of shuffling feet was fast dying away. The upper halls had already become quiet. Then sounds of every sort ceased, and strain his ears as he might to catch some sign of outside events, he heard nothing.

The silence bored him.

"Suppose the old trap is on fire," he mused. "No such luck tho' with exams in sight. School houses always burn down in summer time."

In spite of this assurance he sniffed the air suspiciously. A faint odor of smoke came sifting in through the cracks around the door. Convinced beyond doubt of his danger, the indolent Bob sprang to his feet, and pressed his nose to the edge of the door inhaling with deadly seriousness.

The faint odor of smoke was unmistakably that of burning wood. The old trap was at last on fire. After a thousand useless fire drills, in which he had conscientiously taken part, he had been caught on his first refusal to obey the fire gong. These thoughts so enraged Bob's sense of justice that for a moment he stood unable to help himself.

To get more evidence that the building was afire, the dazed prisoner applied his eye to the keyhole. A thin spiral of smoke was rising from the nearest table.

"Help!" he yelled explosively, "Help!" and began such a frantic attack on the door with both fists and feet that had rescue been near at hand, no one unarmed would have dared open the door.

The heat, fear, and exertion of the first few minutes so consumed Bob's energy that he sank to the floor exhausted. But a fresh whiff of burning wood roused him to another terrific bombardment.

The halls were already noisy with the return of the students to their classrooms, but Bob's lung power and thunder drowned all natural sounds, until in a mere second of silence, he heard a movement in the laboratory.

Thoughts of a rescue party gave him a last spasm of strength. The door trembled under convulsive and thunderous shocks, and a hoarse voice, breaking with emotion, called "Help!" followed by an incoherent explanation, in which such words as "smoke" and "fire" alone were intelligible.

Professor Claypoole with feigned anxiety, followed by the innocent chemistry class, rushed for the trembling door.

Bob did not hear the key in the lock, nor anticipate the suddenly opened door, for like a wildman he staggered into the astonished and speechless group. But he saw neither his instructor nor his gaping classmates. His eyes were fascinated by a thin wave of smoke that rose from a metal crucible in which smoked a number of burning splinters.

"Did you smell smoke, Robert?" asked Professor Claypoole with unmistakable satisfaction.

Debating

Although debating is now a well-established activity of the Salina High School, only a few of the students ever try to make the teams. This year only seven, four of whom were girls, entered the preliminary try-out. Those chosen to represent the school in the annual triangular debate with Abilene and Junction City were Alfred Heusner, Zella Conkling and Rudolph Morgenstern for the affirmative, and Wayne Martin, Ethel Hoskins and Vera Nichols for the negative. Of this group only Rudolph Morgenstern and Wayne Martin had any experience in debate.

The debate was held on February 23, the negative team going to Junction City, and the affirmative team meeting Abilene on the home floor. The question for discussion was, "Resolved: That Congress enact legislation requiring all disputes between labor and capital to be brought before a board of arbitration for settlement." Although the question was heavy and generally dull, the debate was of unusual interest as both sides were well prepared and thoroughly aroused by the closeness of the contest. Salina High, however, won both decisions, the first complete victory since she became a part of the triangular debate. This double-headed victory has put debating on the schedule of popular activities at the Salina High.

REFORMS

Pupils are loafing,
Teachers are waiting
Idling will bring
Cause for their failing.
Reforms are needed
For the poor failure;
He is ne'er heeded
On asking for cure.

Put a small heater
On each lifeless seat.
This would to the reader
Bring much needed heat.
'Twould encourage study
On the part of each boy,
And to each girl it would be
A source of much joy.

And in the hot spring,
When students do thirst,
A small fountain bubbling
From inkwell, this curse
Would alleviate.
Bring 'lectric fan,
This blessing to man
To cool fevered pate.

These little reforms
Inexpensive, we're sure,
Would raise each student
To brilliant, from poor.
And no more would faculty
Be troubled by those
Impervious to study
From their heads to their toes.

Football Line-Up

EDGAR MUIR, Captain
"Eddie"

Captain Muir was the most popular figure of the Salina High Athletic world. He was a veteran in the game and was the balance on the team. He ran close to the ground, and if Muir couldn't carry the ball for a gain, nobody could.

LAWRENCE HOWER, End
"Percy"

Hower played his first football this season, but gave promise of developing into a heady player. He was a consistent player and always there.

FRANCIS CLARK, Half Back (Right)
"Clark"

Clark started as lineman and made rapid development. He was skilful at carrying and at interference. His weight, which did not interfere with his speed, made his aggressive playing a terror to his opponents.

LAWRENCE BEIL, Guard and Tackle
"Beil"

Beil did steady work in the line throughout the season. His knowledge of football made him a reliable player. Altho' Beil in practice and in the game got most of the scars, he always came back for more.

"Butler"

Brassie, the peppery half back, was good on defense. He had good interference and was fast enough to get away. His end runs were the main thrills of Salina's football games.

MAX BRILL, Full Back
"Mucks"

Brill is a veteran in the game and ran up his usual good record on the gridiron. His line plunging was wonderful. He runs by leaps and his high stepping makes him a difficult man to tackle.

GEORGE KOHR, Guard
"Core"

Kohr's work as guard was steady and persistent. He has few equals as a defensive player, and there was no worry when Kohr was on the job. He was expert at making openings for back field men when they were carrying the ball.

RAYMOND GROSS, Half Back
"Gross"

Playing football was a business with Gross, and he threw every ounce of energy and weight into the game. He made a reputation for himself by tackling in a crisis behind the line.

DONALD LANG, End
"Don"

Don played in few games and showed flashes of genuine ability. He was short, however, on practice, which fact handicapped him somewhat in the games.

LEACILE ABBOTT, Guard
"Bluey"

Bluey was one of the football men to get an official "S". He played a steady game and was efficient on line work.

THE HABIT

WESLEY ANDERSON, Center
"Wes"

"Wes" was a veteran at center as his playing indicated. He was steady and reliable in the game and particularly successful at breaking up plays before they started.

GODFREY LONGHOFFER
"Deutch"

Longhoffer played without science, depending entirely on native ability. He handled back field efficiently. With more knowledge of the game, he would become a good player.

HARDY PADGETT, End
"Padgett"

Padgett was the strong end man when the season opened. His knowledge of football and his willingness to work made him a definite part of the strength of the team. He dived low, tackled hard and gave a good account of himself in the game. The injury which kept Padgett off the field a good part of the season was a bit of hard luck for the team.

LESLIE KREPS, Back Field
"Krebs"

Krebs was strong in back field. His low stature gave him an advantage in breaking through the line. He had agility and was famous for drop kicking with his left foot.

"Preacher"

Bennett was mighty in terrorizing opposing teams. His best work was breaking up the opponents' plays. He was strong on tackle.

BOYS BASKET BALL TEAM

Basket Ball Line-Up

MAX BRILL, Center
"Mucks"

The big captain is the best athlete in the school. The basket ball team was practically built around him. He was fast in play, clever on the dribble, and so long that he seemed to drop the ball down into the basket. "Mucks" was keen on scoring and great in defense.

PAUL BRASSFIELD, Guard
"Butler"

"Butler" scored his share of points in the basket ball victories. He was efficient on foot work and successful in working the ball down the field. "Hold 'er Brassie" was popular advice from the side lines. And Brassie always did.

ROBERT BERGSTEN, Forward
"Bergie"

Bergsten's specialty was scoring for the team. His form in shooting made watching him a pleasure. When Bergie's unerring eye directed a basket shot, the scorekeeper was never disappointed.

MERRILL BENNETT, Guard
"Preacher"

Preacher's aggressive playing made him a genuine jinx to opposing teams.

He was the weight of the team and strong in breaking up opponents' plays. At the Manhattan tournament he was the class of the Salina team.

CHRISTOPHER VANORDEN, Forward
"Shadow"

Chris has more pep and endurance than any fellow of the team. He is a good aggressive fighter always going after the ball. He won the Ellsworth game at Salina by shooting the ball from every angle of the field.

DWIGHT NICHOLS, Guard
"?——"

Dwight played an opening season that promises a star for 1918. His weight, stability and coolness fit him ideally for a brilliant basket ball player. He is dependable on passes and fights "heads up."

RAYMOND GROSS, Sub-Forward
"So Gross"

Gross played few games owing to the fact that the guards were seldom out of the game. While his size scored against him, he has pep, agility, and endurance and has a future in the 1918 team.

Basket Ball Season of 1916

The Salina High School may look back with reasonable pride to the 1916-17 basket ball season, which gave them the championship of the Fifth District and incidentally a record for high-class playing.

At the beginning of the season the outlook for basket ball was unpromising. The team itself was pessimistic as to the outcome without the support of Muir. But hard work, and continued practice built up a real machine that could not be defeated by any team in the district. It was not so much individual playing, though Brill was the very center of the team, but the combination that scored the big successes of the season.

The team played eighteen games and lost but three, two of these to teams which Salina had beaten two games in three. The season was a glorious one and the all-star five rushed through with ease until it made the trip to the big state meet where it was stopped by one of the strongest teams in the state. Even here it gave an exhibition of high-class playing that indicated the strength of the team.

LINES TO CHRIS

Long had I traveled thru Cicero, old,
 And many goodly marks and credits
 seen:
 By many a grind had I been known as keen,
 When Latin students flocked, hard lines to mold.
 Oft of one deep abyss had I been told
 That deep browed Cicero digged for those who rode:
 Yet never did I sense its dark abode
 Till I heard General speak out loud and bold:
 Then felt I like some watcher of the skies
 When a huge meteor falls into his den;
 Or like some bluffer when with streaming eyes
 He stares at his report; and all the mean
 Looked at me rather with a sad surmise—
 Silent, upon a seat in Room Thirteen.

AFTER looking through this book, and enjoying it, as we hope you have, we wonder if you realize through what financial sources this book was made possible. Had it not been for the interest of the Salina merchants and business houses, who have seen the advantage of advertising with us, our High School would not have had the honor of publishing an annual. Your share of the honor can easily be carried by showing the advertisers our appreciation. The way which appeals to them most is the patronage of the High School students.

If A Feller Only Was

While walking through a crowded downtown street the other day,
I heard a little urchin to his comrades
turn and say:

"Say Jimmie let me tell you'se I'd be happy as a clam
If I only was de feller dat me
mudder t'inks I am.

"Gee, Jim, she t'inks dat I'm a wonder and she knows her little lad

Could never mix wid nothin dat was ugly, mean or bad.

Lots er times I sits and t'inks how nice 'twould be, gee whiz
If a feller only was de feller dat his mudder t'inks he is!"

My friends, be yours a life of toil
or undiluted joy,
You still can learn a lesson from this small unlettered boy.

Don't aim to be an earthly saint with your eyes fixed on a star;
Just try to be the fellow that your mother t'inks you are.
